
CARNIVAL OF BEAUTY.

Charming Scenes and Women at the Hospital Bazar in Malden.

The carnival of nations being held in National hall, Malden, for the benefit of the Malden hospital, is a carnival of beauty as well.

It wears well, and impresses one as appearing just as picturesque after repeated visits as it did the first night.

Its charms are far more varied than are found in the conventional bazar, owing to the fact that most of the nationalities of both ancient and modern times are represented in both booths and costumes.

To see the graceful, girlish forms and pretty faces of the attendants set off by gowns of every period from before the Christian era down to the French empire, many of them composed of rich oriental stuffs, it is hard to believe that the lovely creatures inside of them are just everyday 19th century girls when in private life.

The beautiful Greek temple of pure white and gold, created and managed by Mrs Godfrey Ryder, which occupies the place of honor in the hall, is well worth the price of admission alone, and when one sees the bevy of sweet young women in the simple yet chaste garb of Grecian maidens who dispense sweetmeats over the counter, one feels that 25 cents is far too little to pay for such a treat.

Last night the pageant of different nations was repeated, with Mrs Ryder as the grand marshal. An excellent musical program was also given.

Tonight will be the gala occasion of the week, as Gov Greenhalge has promised to attend with his staff. The latter, with their glittering gold lace, will furnish an element of splendor to the visiting contingent which has heretofore been confined to those participating in the management of the fair.
